Dedication

This book is dedicated to the folk who work for Nature, those who help the survival of this planet's soil and rocks, oceans and rivers, trees and plants, sea and land creatures. May your efforts bear fruit. May your numbers multiply. May mankind understand. May all living forms prosper and progress as a result.

Thanks

First and foremost I wish to thank my wife Prunella. I started writing this book in 1987, and have been so busy living my life, I may never have finished it without her encouragement and insistence. I also appreciate the support I have enjoyed from my children. Particular thanks go to my son Nestor. Through his urging me into a lecture tour of South Africa, I met Robin and Nadine, the publishers, and Michelle Berrington, a teacher in the Eastern Cape. Thanks also to Marysia Pfnik, a London schoolteacher at the time she read the first drafts. The approval of these two schoolteachers has been a major source of encouragement.

Rules Of Creation

Story overview

On a faraway planet called Foreva, in the great galaxy of Enprincipia, Ishemet AmoriMurlon, (the child who forgot to forget) grew up and devoted his time teaching others the laws of Creation. Ishemet (Josh) showed others how to practice remembering who they really were.

Josh reminded his students that they were all born with Inner Wisdom, knowing the highest truths of life and the best of everything that was ever worth knowing.

Gradually he awakened this inner knowledge, and taught them how to turn this knowledge into wisdom, thus creating a life that is wonderful and worth living. Using visionary stories he showed his students how to play a great part in achieving miraculous healings for themselves and all life. One such story illustrated how the seven warring tribes became a single great nation, from that moment the planet's name was changed from Ifeva to Foreva.

In Mount Hotwater, a small village on planet Earth, school teacher Lena Sallows is suddenly taken ill and is rushed to hospital.

Nobody knew where Josh, the replacement teacher, came from or how he was appointed. He never talked about himself, successfully deflecting personal questions right back to the questioner, or converting them into philosophical debates.

From the day Josh arrived at the Mount Hotwater village school, a gradual awakening took place in his 15 students permanently affecting their lives and that of Planet Earth.
